

Plan of Study

Directions:

For success in any career, it is important to begin obtaining the skills early in your life. Several skills can be obtained by taking the appropriate courses in high school and post-secondary training. In order to identify the classes which you would most benefit from in the next few years, develop your own plan of study.

1. Using your high school's course handbook, pick out the courses you would benefit most from taking.
2. Provide the title of the course, as well as a description of the course.
3. Research local universities or colleges to determine the correct college coursework for a position in the field of teaching/training.
4. Develop your list, then present the list to the class.
5. While presenting, give a description of each course needed, as well as why the course is important for a career in the Teaching/Training Pathway.
