Students at Johnson High School Earn Industry Certifications

Students take important step in pursuing career goals by completing industry-recognized certifications

Columbus, Ohio (January 01, 2019) - Johnson High School is pleased to recognize five students who earned industry certifications this academic year. Through the intensive certification program, these students have gained essential career skills in various Career and Technical Education (CTE) subject areas that will promote a successful transition to postsecondary education and the workforce.

Students with these certifications have received the necessary background and knowledge in their respective fields of interest that will lead them to a valuable and meaningful career. To earn the certification, each student completed the required coursework and passed a rigorous final exam.

Chris Beams - Southwest Airlines Professional Communications Certification
Hilary Bermea - Southwest Airlines Professional Communications Certification
Heidi Cruz - Southwest Airlines Professional Communications Certification
Rebecca Taylor - Southwest Airlines Professional Communications Certification
Xavier Valdez - Southwest Airlines Professional Communications Certification

“These industry certifications are an amazing opportunity and advantage for students to have when applying for jobs and colleges,” says John Smith, CTE Teacher.

Endorsed by industry experts such as Bayer CropScience, Express Employment Professionals and Southwest Airlines, and powered by iCEV, the certifications enhance student résumés and help them stand out to prospective colleges and employers. The certifications reflect current industry standards in order to ensure students are career-ready.

“Our goal in collaborating with industry partners to build certifications was to provide students with a meaningful, valuable validation of the skills they have developed through their course work,” said Dusty Moore, President, iCEV. “The certifications are meant to have an immediate positive impact on students as they plan for their future after high school, whether that is attending college or joining the workforce. On behalf of CEV Multimedia and our industry partners, we congratulate all students at Johnson High School for this tremendous accomplishment. ”
