Introduction to Fashion

Lab Activities

Fashion Styles

Directions:

Students will find images which fit each of the fashion styles discussed in the presentation. They should use the Internet, magazines and catalogs to search for garments and accessories for each style. They must find at least three garments, two accessories and one full outfit for each style and create a series of collages using the pages provided on the Fashion Styles Activity. Students will identify which styles they most often wear and create an additional collage of items in their own closet, each labeled with the style it most closely represents. Then students will write a paragraph or two explaining the elements of culture, why we need cultural diversity and how this diversity affects fashion.

Fashion Glossary

Directions:

Students will create a glossary of terms related to the fashion industry. They should first choose an area of fashion on which they will focus. A list of suggested fashion areas is provided. Then, they will identify and define terms relating to the area. Glossaries should include at least 20 terms or phrases not included on the Introduction to Fashion Vocabulary Handout. Each term should have a definition and an example of real-life usage in a fashion magazine, website or other publication. After students have created their glossaries, have each student share a few terms with the class.

Projects

What Is Fashion?

Directions:

Students will perform brief interviews with a variety of people to gain a perspective on what fashion means to different people. Students should ask at least eight subjects to define fashion and describe fashion's importance in their lives. They should also ask subjects to provide their names, ages and occupations. Interview forms to aid in the collection of information are provided on the What Is Fashion? Project sheet. Subjects should be of various ages and occupations to increase the variety in responses. It is recommended students record interviews for later reflection. After collecting responses, students should write a one-page essay describing what they learned from the experience and how they agreed or disagreed with subjects' responses. If time allows, have students share experiences with the class after turning in the Project.

Fashion Timeline

Directions:

Working in groups of three or four, students will create a fashion timeline. Each group should be assigned a twenty-year period. No two groups should be assigned the same time period. Each group will create a timeline which includes at least seven events which affected the fashion industry or the way fashion was viewed and used by society. For each event, students should find an image to represent it and write two to three paragraphs describing the event and its importance. Once timelines are complete, groups will present timelines to the class in chronological order and the timelines should be displayed in the classroom in chronological order.
